FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS

Q: I got a letter from a college. Does that mean I can get in?

A: Colleges purchase thousands of names and addresses of students with test scores within a certain range and send one communication to everyone. These letters (and e-mails) are meant to capture a student's attention and encourage the students to learn more about the college. They are NOT offers of admission. A student can only be admitted by submitting an application which is then reviewed by the college admissions office, which makes admission decisions. (Source: Link, the next step in school counseling, Carol E. Wasden, Nov/Dec 2007)

Q: I can do all of my research on the Internet. Why do I need to go to the college fair or speak with an Admissions Officer?

A: Colleges want to ensure that they offer admission to students who are likely to accept the offer. One of the ways colleges attempt to determine the likelihood a student will accept an admissions offer is by tracking students who have visited the campus or met with admissions officers at their high school, college fair, or area receptions. It is also impossible to get a realistic perception of a college/university without actually visiting the campus. Remember that colleges are advertising on their website and in the brochures and catalogs. You are only seeing a small piece of the student body and campus life.

Q: Do I really have to take hard classes my senior year?

A: Yes, it is a good idea to continue with a college prep schedule your senior year. This should include AP, Honors, and/or upper level English, Math, Science, and History courses. Colleges will ask to see a transcript after your 7th semester of high school (1st semester of your senior year) and your acceptance into a college is contingent (dependent) on your final transcript grades and course load. Taking an "easy" schedule your senior could also affect the amount scholarship money you receive.

Q: Once I've been admitted, I can "slack off" at school, right?

A: As previously stated, your acceptance to a college/university is contingent on your final grades and course load. Your acceptance can be revoked at any time up until the first day of class at the college. Acceptance can be revoked for a number of reasons, these reasons may include: an arrest record, felony conviction, failure to pay deposits/fees, school discipline record and final transcript grades.

Q: Why is my ACT/SAT score so important?

A: ACT/SAT scores are important because many scholarships and college acceptances are directly based upon your ACT/SAT score. The higher your score, the better your chances of getting into the college you want to attend and the higher your chances are of receiving scholarship money.
